was dismissed and the plaintiff, without objection, filed his first amended complaint without more specifically stating the claims in connection with the original complaint which were dismissed. The defendant objected to the addition of claims, and because it could not be said that the plaintiff intended to include those claims in his first amended complaint, the trial court denied the motion. The appellate court reversed, holding that the plaintiff should have been given a reasonable opportunity to amend the original complaint before it was dismissed. *436 The court stated that the fact that the original complaint contained other claims does not justify dismissal when, as in the instant case, the defect was not readily apparent and the plaintiff was not given an opportunity to amend. Such an amendment would have cured the defect as to the original complaint. ¶ 5 In the case at bar, a claim in the original complaint was dismissed as a matter of law and defendant moved to strike the remaining counts. The trial court granted the motion. No complaint was made as to the manner in which the issue was raised. The substance of the motion was that the plaintiff's counts and other allegations were not stated with sufficient particularity or clarity to apprise defendant of the charges against him. The denial of the motion to dismiss was correct. Although the original complaint is a written pleading (see: Ill. Rev. Stat. 1975, ch. 110, par. 31(4)), it does not follow that it must be perfect. Rather, it must be sufficiently specific to apprise the adverse party of the nature of the claim and the relief sought.

The defect alleged by the defendant was not readily apparent, and no prejudice was shown by reason thereof. [?] 6 In order to be entitled to his costs in this appeal, the defendant must be the prevailing party. (Ill. Rev. Stat. 1975, ch. 110, par. 75.) In our opinion, he was. The judgment of the circuit court of Kane County is therefore affirmed. Affirmed.
