Abutting the nearby suburb of Barangaroo and with thousands of carpark spaces, the site is set to become a major residential and commercial hub, with room for more public housing and high-rise apartments. The masterplan of the building is simple. The 138-metre-high centrepiece towers will provide office space and will be leased to companies across multiple sectors, while low-rise buildings will house residents in apartment towers. The building is designed with a north facade overlooking the harbour, and a south facade overlooking Centennial Park. To the north of the development is a series of parklands, which will feature the new Sydney Aquarium, museum and planetarium, the Opal Street Museum of Earth and Planetarium, the underground Lynton House, and the underground pool and carpark for the transport interchange. Sydney will have a world-class convention and exhibition centre that will cater for 2.5 million square metres of space, and also two new state-of-the-art concert halls, the Sydney Opera House and the Sydney Entertainment Centre. The nearby Barangaroo Central Park will also feature an ice rink, skate park, children's playground and café. A new underground railway station is set to become the western gateway to the city, with the new western suburbs being served by six underground stations to be located in the Barangaroo Centre. The new development is earmarked for development in 2020/21, and will become home to about 4,500 people. Many of the towers will be leased to other developers to create new inner-city dwellings. There is a new shopping centre near the station that is due to be completed in 2018. Dezember 20, 2020 Designer: Tish Hinojos - Madonna Lara. All rights reserved.
