I've got a script below that simply needs to search a directory for a specified string and if it is found, run one of two command lines based on which string it finds. If the string is not found, then it outputs a message. The problem I have is that the script continues to look for the string even after it's found once. Is there a simple way to get the script to only look through the directory once or is this the standard way of using IF and ELSE statements? #!/bin/bash for dir in ~/ftp/01/3/ do find $dir -type f -name "robots.txt" -exec grep "Moved" {} \; if [ $? != 0 ] then echo "found no string" echo "doing stuff"
