* Photoshop is available for Mac, Windows, Linux, and others. * It's a comprehensive collection of tools that includes editing, visualization, and retouching tools. * It allows you to work with images and vector graphics for more complex effects. * It also allows you to view all layers and masks when you view them in the Layers panel. * You can't use some features on the Web or on mobile devices; you have to download the program and install it on your computer. * Performance can be a problem when the image is very large, and images with this much detail can take a long time to render. * It's expensive ($20-50 per year) for more features, such as the ability to save images to file types like Flash or to the Web. * Photoshop requires a lot of memory (RAM) and disc space. If you plan to work with large image files, you need at least 8 GB of RAM and at least 40 GB of disc space.

Tuesday, September 05, 2016 Do you feel fortunate? Sure, you know all about the benefits that taking the time to connect, to help another person develop their own confidence and their personality, and to relate to the world as a more connected human being yields. But what about the burden of the downsides? We're all aware of the dangers of being connected, of sharing our stories and vulnerable emotions, of being vulnerable to attack. Some people are out to hurt us, and there are plenty of angry or toxic individuals and communities in this world who can wreak havoc on our lives by making our day-to-day interactions with others feel like mortal combat. I've discovered through my experiences with helping others, and dealing with them, that that's a small price to pay for all the ways that we can use technology to connect with each other, and to live better lives by leaning on others. But there are downsides to the downsides, as well. There are those who claim that people ought not be trusted with their own vulnerability, because they're all potential rapists, thieves, or mass murderers; or those who say we need to be protected, and that as we grow up, we learn to be strong. Neither of those ideas are true. We grow up to be real, flawed, confident humans, capable of making good choices and often, for better or worse, down fallible and sometimes devastatingly wrong choices, with the capacity to learn and grow from mistakes. It's what being human really is. I've connected with people who've shared their stories of being assaulted by people they thought were friends, people who preyed on their vulnerability because they wanted to use it to harm them. That's their story, and it doesn't make them more or less than us; it just makes them human like us, like we all are. The truth is that there are plenty of people out there who want to hurt us, and it's just another part of the bargain we make to live in a world together. We make a bargain to live with our differences, and to share and help each other, and to stand up for each other. And we try to understand and live

When they reach the cemetery, which is on the other side of the lake, they see that the grave is unguarded. They carefully remove all the dirt from it, and when they reach the bottom they find a dead body. The body is dressed in the same clothes he was wearing during his visit, and on the body is the same signature from the bamboo stake. They disturb nothing and leave the grave. As they approach the hotel to report their success, they see that someone has come out of the hotel. It is the same person who was at the hotel during the search. That person, who knows that the box they are carrying is valuable, asks them what they have done with the grave. The boy tells him that it has been opened. The person says that he would like to look. He insists that they let him look, and as they do so he begins to read the words on the body's hand. The person is astonished to read the words, "I, Mutter, give this body as a permanent burial place for this corpse." The person now knows that the person who was buried was not Mutter but George Armstrong Custer. A copy of this story is available at the National Archives in Washington.
