A simple, rapid, and direct method of detecting avian influenza virus in human patients with suspected infection was developed using an enzyme immunoassay for the detection of the nucleoprotein of the virus. In the enzyme immunoassay, the inactivated hemagglutinin (HA) was coated onto microtiter wells of a microplate and the immunoglobulin was labeled with peroxidase and anti-immunoglobulin. When the enzyme substrate tetramethylbenzidine was added to the wells, the enzymatic reaction produced a color which indicated the presence of antigen. By using a simple dipstick method in an automatic enzyme immunoassay system, a result was obtained in 2 h, even in the case of high avian influenza virus titers. This new method may be used for detecting both subtype H5 and H7 of avian influenza virus and is expected to be a useful test in the diagnosis of avian influenza virus infection.The present invention relates to a method and a device for assembling a liquid jetting apparatus such as an ink jet printer or a liquid ejection apparatus such as an ink jet recording head. A liquid jetting apparatus which is an example of an assembling device is disclosed in JP A-63-214815.
