count in Connecticut. It is a public event held at a private estate; only volunteers are allowed. It is a great opportunity to see rare birds and to view common birds in their natural habitat. So far this year, I have seen my first Blackpoll warbler, a juvenile Osprey on Lake Iselin, 3 different Rose-breasted Grosbeaks, American Tree Sparrows,

Ruby-throated, Blue-winged and Western Tanagers, Northern Bobwhite and Gray Partridge, Hooded Mergansers, and various ducks and shorebirds. I've seen a male and female Blue-winged Warbler, and a pair of Great Crested flycatchers, a pair of Canada Warblers, a winter American Robin, and a Northern Parula.

There are four species of warblers that breed in Connecticut: Black and Blue, Cedar, Hermit, and Olive. Three of these species are very rare in CT. The Hermit is fairly common, and is often seen in suburban areas. The common Black-and-Blue and Olive Warblers are very rare. The Cedar Warbler is extremely rare. This year, I saw my first Black-and-Blue Warbler, a juvenile male (seen in the photograph). It showed up in a little stand of shrubs in an open field north of the estate's main house. Two Blue-winged were feeding on the ground nearby.
